

Brad's first song written was Cowgirl Angel in 1999. A lot of things in his life inspired him into writing his first song. He believes that a song could always use some tweaking in it and it's not finished until it goes from your hand and hit onto radio with some star singing it.

Friends, family, other writers and everything and everyone has inspired ideas for his song, including off of the radio, TV and even the Internet. Most situations that inspire a song can be like a life story that you would have to put into a 2 or 3-minute song and try to keep it short and simple.

Sometimes ideas does make it into a song and there's a lot of time when things don't make it because of the idea don't really fit in with the rest of the lyrics pertaining to the song he's writing. Sometimes he'll combine several ideas into his song and some things don't really makes it.

There are times in life like experiencing illness where you do have help and also other life experiences does make it into a song. It's just how the song is turning out whether or not something makes into the song. He likes to writes songs that would draw ideas or inspires others to write.

He does question whether a song is a hit or a flop, one day it may sound great to him and the next he'll check and then consider rewriting it or improve it in any way.

His goal includes having a hit played by a band even if it's just a local band. His philosophy in songwriting is to write a song that people would listen to upon their moods, like a sad song if they feel sad, a funny song if the listener is up to comedy, etcetera.

George Strait, Brad Paisley, Allen Jackson are the ones that inspires him to write because they pretty much write their own materials. He likes country, gospel and classic rock and roll genres.

He believes that music does influence people's moods regardless of genres could get people into a sad mood or a happy mood or vice versa.

His philosophy of Nebraska 2 Nashville group is to have a good fellowship with fellow songwriters and to encourage co-writing of songs among songwriters, helping to make each group member better songwriters.

He said if he became famous, he would not forget his roots, friends, family and in matter of fact take all his friends and family with him to fame.

To put people in any mood is an art form, Brad believes, songs are written to put people in different moods like Romantic songs to stir up Romance in couples and then there's comedy songs written to make us laugh.

He has a seven year old son, currently Brad is divorced and his son thinks he is a songwriter like his dad (Brad) and kind of make up words to songs on the radio and even writes some when they go to the meetings.
